Pomochill

Pomegranate (Punica granatum L.) belongs to family Lythraceae. Due to its hardy nature, minimum water requirement, response to high technological practices, fine table and therapeutic values, excellent keeping quality and export potential have made the pomegranate highly lucrative and remunerative'.

The edible part of the fruit is called 'Ari' constituting 52 per cent of total fruit weight (w/w) comprising of 78 per cent juice and 22 per cent Arils . Pomegranate arils are rich in vitamin C. vitamin K, antioxidants and polyphenols such as tannins, quercetin and anthocyanins which are good for heart and have anti-cancer properties .

Pomegranate consumption is limited due to difficulty in peeling to obtain the seeds. Presenting pomegranate arils in 'ready-to-eat' form would be a convenient and desirable alternative to encourage the consumption of fresh fruits and may also help to increase pomegranate cultivation.

What is a BRIX?

A sugar (Sucrose) content in a fruit juice is called as BRIX. Which is also called as TSS. (Total Soluble Solids).

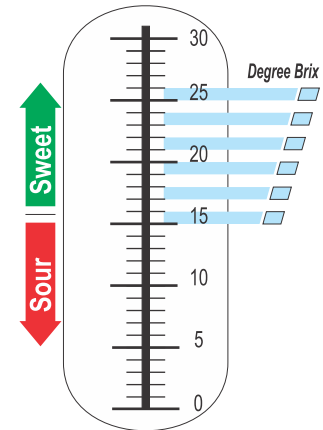

TSS counts the soluble solids like proteins, fats, Organic acid, carbohydrates, minerals etc. The combination of all these is called as BRIX.

The quality of grapes is determined on the basis of BRIX level. BRIX Level Below 16 will be considered as sour & above will be considered as Sweet.

One degree Brix is 1 gram of sucrose in 100 grams of solution and represents the strength of the solution as percentage by mass.
